

Captain America and Winter Soldier Land at GEM

Geppi's Entertainment Museum Exhibits

The Art of Steve Epting

Whether in the pages of the original Captain America comic books beginning a decade ago, or on the big screen in Captain America: The Winter Soldier, the story of the unlikely return of Bucky Barnes has captivated pop culture fans around the world. Now, Geppi's Entertainment Museum (GEM) celebrates this incredible story with an exhibit of artist Steve Epting's original comic book artwork from the series.

Steve Epting Originals: Captain America and The Winter Soldier, featuring the artist's original art from the collections of Nick Katradis and Jason Versaggi, is now open to the public at GEM. The exhibit is comprised of 46 pieces of Epting's art, including 16 key covers from the series and 30 pages of interior art from the 2005-2011 Marvel series.

Twenty one Comic Frames were used in this exhibit from Collector Frame. Michael Solof, Collection and Exhibits Manager for Geppi's Entertainment Museum gave us this feedback on our products:

"The Event went fantastic and got rave reviews from all involved! Many, many compliments on the frames...so thank you for that. They added just the right splash of patriotic colors to the wall of mostly black and white original art."

"The frames were super easy to deal with and beautiful to look at! I look forward to getting more in the future."

